The Act Protecting Birds for Two Years is Unconstitutional Because Unreasonable and Arbitrary and Therefore Votd.

HOYDTON, VA., Oct. 11.-Special.-The ollowing opinion upon the game law of Virginia was handed down by Judge Homes, of the County Court of Mecklenburg, Friday, This action was brought here in a friendly way to test the constitutionality of the law. It will prove interesting to the huntsmen, and throw some light upon this very vexatious ques-

The evidence proved beyond question that he did the act, but that it was done, as admitted, on his own premises. He appealed, and the case is here for decision, and the only question raised, is the act of Assembly under which he was convicted constitutional? If not, the act is mail and void.

The act is as follows: "I. Do it appealed."

mil and void.

The act is as follows: "I. He it enacted by the General Assembly of Virginia, frat it shall be unlawful for any person o kill or capture any partridges (or quall) in the State of Virginia for the period of two years, or to offer for sale or buy any partridges (or quail) so unlawfully killed or captured in sald State within the afore-

MAY STROOT ON HIS OWN LAND.

MAY SHOOT ON HIS OWN LAND. MAY SHOOT ON HIS OWN LAND.

It is elementary haw that the owner of the soil has a qualified property in the game upon his own land, which becomes absolutely his property, provided he will capture the same. It is not denied that the State can, under the police regulations, enact laws to preserve the game, so as to allow it to propagate, and to prevent the killing of game during certain seasons of the year, so as to give time vent the killing of game during certain seasons of the year, so as to give time for propagation. This is necessary and for the good of all, but can the Siate prohibit the owner of soil from killing game on his own land altogether, say for promote the owner of soil from killing aams on his own land altogether, say for a period of two years, as provided by act above? If it can do so for two, why not ten or even fifty years, or take away from the owner of the soil the right altogether, to kill game, though on his own land, in which he has property rights and that without due process of law or compensation made?

and that without due process of law or compensation made?

Now the United States Courts have held that an act need not be in direct violation of any part of the Constitution to be unconstitutional, but that an act of assembly, which imposes an unreasonable, unnecessary and arbitrary restraint, is null and void, because unconstitutional. Such being the case, the question is, does the act above impose an unreasonable, unnecessary, and arbitrary restraint upon the owner in regard to his own property? NULL AND VOID. I think it does for the reason that it ab-solutely prohibits a man from taking game on his land for a period of two years, not-sithstanding the fact that the said period withstanding the fact that the said period is not necessary for the preservation and propagation of game, because the evidence discloses the fact that partridges are more abundant than they have been for years. If the act had provided that they should not be killed or captured during certain seasons of the year, so as to provide for the propagation and preservation of partridges, I should hold that the act was constitutional, but, inasmuch as it absolutely prohibits the killing of partridges for a period of two years, notwithstanding the fact that they saling of partridges for a period of two years, notwithstanding the fact that they are elentiful and abundant, I hold that the restraint imposed by said act, is un-necessary, unreasonable and arbitrary, and, therefore, null and void.
